PLATFORM: As a student at Auburn University involved in multiple organizations and working in different departments across campus, I have seen that I represent so much more than being just a tour guide and answering a few questions. I represent something that is showing people their dreams and how those dreams can become their reality. As a member of SGA Executive Student Council, the role is even more ... a member as President of Student Council is not only someone who is there for Auburn students, faculty, and staff. They are the faces and names of the University who work silently and behind the scenes to get work done and serve whole-heartedly. What interests me about holding a position is helping people be their true selves, while helping run an organization with a group of people who have similar goals. We all know the quote, "Surround yourself with people who you want to be, and make wise decisions", and these are the individuals I look up to on SGA. Becoming a member would not only allow me to be surrounded by fellow leaders, but also help lead the community of scholars and leaders around me. I have had the privilege of serving multiple leadership and officer positions over the past four years at Auburn. Through personal and professional relationships with Deans, Faculty, & Staff (whether it be the CADC, the Rec, Auburn Football, or other departments across campus), students, mentors, and alumni across the country, I have gained first-hand experience and knowledge for what it takes to professionally contribute and lead a team and work with different types of people. Whether it be meetings, tours, managing staff/members and online accounts, to offcampus events, and volunteer staffing, I know what it takes to organize and communicate to different needs of individuals. Two of my strong suits are organization and communication. With these skills, I feel as if I could help the CADC Student Council and SGA grow in different aspects into what it can be. Without effective organization and communication, an organization cannot be effective in achieving its goals. Whether it is communication between members, online media and newsletters, emailing and scheduling events with recruitment, advisors, departments, and off-campus locations/vendors, organizing volunteer staff, meetings, etc. ... I believe my skill sets can help not only the CADC Student Council but the University and student body as a whole.
